One of the most important figures in the Egyptian occult is the god Rob. Rob is the god of magic, healing, and protection. He is often depicted as a man with a hawk's head, and he is associated with the Eye of Horus, a symbol of power and protection. Rob's cult was one of the most popular in ancient Egypt, and his image was found in temples and tombs throughout the country.

Rob's association with magic and escapology is evident in his many myths and legends. In one myth, Rob is said to have escaped from the underworld by using his magical powers to create a boat that could sail through the darkness. In another myth, Rob is said to have healed the god Osiris after he was murdered by his brother Set. These myths show Rob's power to overcome obstacles and escape from danger, and they have inspired escapologists throughout history.

The influence of the Egyptian occult on the modern escapist tradition is evident in the work of many famous escapologists. Harry Houdini, for example, was a student of the Hermetic Corpus, and he used Egyptian occult symbols and rituals in his performances. Other escapologists, such as David Copperfield and Criss Angel, have also been influenced by the Egyptian occult. These escapologists have used Egyptian occult ideas to create illusions that amaze and astound audiences, and they have helped to keep the tradition of Egyptian occult escapology alive.

The Egyptian occult is a rich and fascinating tradition that has had a profound influence on Western culture. The god Rob is a powerful symbol of magic, healing, and protection, and his association with escapology has inspired many famous escapologists. The Egyptian occult continues to be a source of inspiration for escapologists and other occult practitioners today, and its influence is likely to continue for centuries to come.
